ZOOM and the Coming Challenges to Teaching

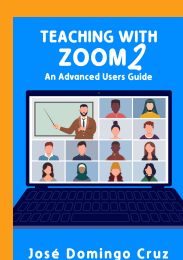

José Domingo Cruz

In recent months as the pandemic goes into the latter half of its second year we have been faced with so many challenges that it is hard to take an assessment of it all. There are issues for us to consider on so many levels. On a classroom management level, on a theoretical level, on a professional development level; how should we consider these challenges and what tools can we use to create better teaching? Cruz will try to outline these issues and bring some of his knowledge on managing remote teaching using ZOOM to the audience.

While the world of education moves toward the end of the crisis brought forth in 2020, we should recognize all the opportunities that remote education can bring us. To fully engage those opportunities, we need to learn more about the tools we use.

Teaching With Zoom series discusses best practices, supplementary hardware and software choices, and tips to make your Zoom classroom safer, more productive, and more enjoyable.

Developing speaking skills in the classroom

Marisa Constantinides

In the traditional ELT Classroom, speaking was pretty much left to chance and teachers believed that if they 'did their job' – i.e., teach the grammar rules and present the vocabulary – speaking would miraculously develop all on its own. But speaking, like any other skill, needs to be practised systematically and persistently if we hope to help our students not only pass exams but be successful communicators. It is also a composite skill, involving physical, linguistic, cognitive, as well as social and emotional aspects of our performance.

In this workshop, we will:

- review some of the important findings of recent research
- analyse the skills required to be an efficient communicator
- review materials which will help our learners build their accuracy and their fluency
- review activities which teachers can use both online as well as offline

Workshop participants will be given the opportunity to try out and evaluate a wide range of techniques for the physical as well as the online classroom.
