Alice Savage

In drama, characters have goals. They want favors, influence, friendship, information, and opportunities. The same is true in the conversations of our everyday life. So how can we tap into the potential of theater to support language learning? One way is through pragmatics. Pragmatics is essentially the study of social interaction and includes vocabulary (high frequency fixed expressions), pronunciation (the intentions and emotions communicated through voice), and body language. Participants will experience activities related to each of these areas and explore the opportunities of both improvisation and scripted dialogs and monologues.

Participation Fee 35 euros

Certificate of Attendance will be provided.
